I agree with the idea that technology is making us less capable of concentrating, thinking deeply and learning effectively in almost all scenarios.
The episode stated that companies shift our attention in things that are important for us or at least it is what it looks like but I can tell that is not completely true. The Consumerism is a clear example of how we are not the ones thinking deeply in our decisions, we just buy things that we do not even need while we are scrolling for example, companies take advantage of our attention, in the video she said that attention goes in spectrums because it is a limited ressource, so at that time we are thinking in multiple choices multiple ads that we have already seen by the time we believe we have a decision the question is if we were very aware of it. This is an example of multitasking too, where we are able to do multiple things at the same time without meaning that we have giving all our attention to one matter, the important one.
I think that in order to be more concentrated when we are doing something is first, stay away from useless apps such as X, Instagram, Youtube etc, and second to "think or slow", take our time to do the task that we are doing.

NEEDS TO IMPROVE!
Some parts are difficult to understand.
